Lloyd Nolan, a villain who will cast a menacing shadow over "Prison Farm." (Right) The tough boys who appeared in "Dead End" and "Crime School" are doing pretty good for themselves. Humphrey Bogart went good on us in the latter picture.

THE speaker was Basil Rathbone, born in South Africa, educated in England and forced to lead a skulking, sinister life on Hollywood celluloid: "In Tale of Two Cities, I rode down some children and killed them. I have beaten little Freddie Bartholomew. In Anna Karenina, I gave Greta Garbo the heave-o out of the house. In another picture I made friends with a very nice old lady, and then, having won her confidence, stole all of her paintings and murdered her, to boot. In still another picture, as the butler of a huge house, I made all other servants pay me ten per cent of their meagre wages and when one old chap begged be not to take the percentage, because his wife had to go to a hospital for an operation, I said, falsetto-key, "That does not interest me. Hand over the money." I have been a cad and a bounder, a sinister, skulking villain who has forced unwelcome attentions upon Garbo, Colbert, Sigrid Gurie, Loretta Young, Olivia de Haviland. I am Public Enemy No. 1, an offense to decent nostrils, and I am fed up with it. I'd like to lead a respectable life on the screen."

Rathbone went on to explain the social repercussions of his screen villainies. If he steps into a department store elevator, women cover against the rear wall of what he calls the "lift" and hide their frightened children under their skirts. He believes firmly that the only reason women are wearing longer skirts is because the abbreviated skirts did not permit them to hide their affrighted progeny. When he walks along the boulevards, policemen trail him in radio cars. Old men turn pale and cover their beards when they see him, fearful that he will tweak their bushy eyebrows and perhaps sink a knife between their aged shoulder blades. At Santa Anita and Inglewood racetracks, when he appears at a window to place a bet, the pair-mutuel men hastily hide the money and keep a wary eye on him until he departs.

Yet Rathbone will admit that his life of crime and brutality on the screen has paid handsome dividends. Virtue may be its own reward, but the illustrious Rogues Gallery of the screen indicates that it pays well to be the aged, steal from the blind, kick the crutches from under the amputees of the infirm, torture the helpless, abuse the weak, blackmail the indigent and commit murder with knife or gun or poison.

I submit that the movies, in proving that villains are better remembered than Pollyannas, have proved nothing new. Cassius, who stabbed Caesar, rode to fame... on that murder. Of all the apostles, the name that comes most readily to mind is that of Judas, who betrayed His Master for thirty pieces of silver. Benedict Arnold is another traitor who has his own peculiar niche in history, and the world still writes about John Wilkes Booth, not because he was an actor, but because he assassinated Lincoln. Of all the characters in Uncle Tom's Cabin, the most readily remembered is Simon Legree.

So if you want to make history, there are two routes open to you, become a great hero or a great villain. It is this latter route which has been pursued successfully by Charles Laughton, Basil Rathbone, Peter Lorre, the late Lon Chaney, Bela Lugosi, Akim Tamiroff, Boris Karloff, Edward G. Robinson, Charles Bickford, Claude Rains, Humphrey Bogart, Lloyd Nolan, John Carradine, George Ratti, Ian Keith, Joseph Calleia, J. Carroll Naish, Porter Hall, Ivan Lebedeff, Brian Donlevy, Warren Hymer, Walter Pidgeon, Bruce Cabot and others of the Rogues' Gallery of the cinema. Rogues Gallery, indeed, for they have explored the gamut of rascality from murder to manacles. "Wanted, Dead or Alive" has hung over each one of them.

There is a co-ed phase to villainy, of course, Bette Davis, who heckled crippled Leslie Howard in "Of Human Bondage," vaulted to stardom because of that performance. In "Jezebel," she added more twigs of laurel by sending George Brent to his death in a duel that she provoked; Bonita Granville is a junior member of the rogues, proving that there's more ways of skinning a cat than Shirley Temple has suggested. Bette and Bonita indicate that vinegar is as potent as honey.

In hear Cecil B. De Mille on the radio, or in person at a banquet, when he unloads his sophistries, you'd get the impression that here indeed was a mild little man, good to his folks and wishing evil to no man. Yet De Mille; subscribing heartily to the credo that a producer must shock movie audiences, has thrown more Christians to the lions in his spectacles than any single Hollywood individual. For all his seeming mildness, De Mille is a blood-thirsty fellow. In "Buccaneer," you will remember that his villain killed by sword, cannon and fire; forced little Franciska Gaal to walk the plank, and in other sequences strangled actors with bare hands.

By Ed Sullivan

What is the most horrifying or shocking scene you've ever shuddered at, on celluloid? My choice would be that scalpinfler in "Lives of a Bengal Lancer," when Douglas Dumbrille, as the Mohammed Khan, drapes pointed sticks under the fingernails of Gary Cooper and Franchot Tone, and then sets the sticks ablaze. The closeup showed the beads of sweat on Cooper's forehead. If the camera had panned to the loge section where I was seated, it would have found equal beads on my own forehead.

In "Mutiny on the Bounty," Charles Laughton hit a new high in horror when he had a deserter flogged until dead. Remember Bruce Cabot, in "Let 'Em Have It." (I think that was the picture), when he stripped the bandages from his face and you saw his name cut into the flesh? Or the picture in which the gangsters took Cagney from the hospital, killed him, propped him against the door of his home? When his mother opened the door, the body of her son crashed to the floor? John Carradine, as the brutal jailer in "Hurricane," was a horrible character, in "Marco Polo," Basil Rathbone either had his chained captives released to peck out the eyes of captives, or, if he felt mellow, tossed them to the lions for an a la carte luncheon.

Karloff, Tamiroff and Lugosi have done some very nice work in their screen careers, scaring ushers out of theatres, giving old ladies nightmares at Bank Nights and otherwise afflicting them. [Continued on page 80]
Don't let fat...ugly, unromantic fat...make you look years older than you are! Pat is inexorable. Get rid of it now with this new, modern method of weight conditioning. It's so easy and you will feel so much better with excess weight gone.

TEST IT AT OUR EXPENSE!
So sure are we that you will be delighted with results...that we offer to send you one month's supply, C.O.D. with a guarantee to return your money if you are not satisfied in every way. Thintabs contain no thyroid...no dinitrophenol...no aspirin. To prove the absolute harmless-ness of the THINTAB Method, we will gladly send a copy of this ethical formula to your doctor upon request.

EXCESS FAT MAY BE DANGEROUS!
Heavy layers of fat often weaken the abdominal muscles, allowing the stomach and intestines to drop, thus promoting causing digestive ills. Insurance companies hesitate to insure a middle aged person who is much overweight. Don't take chances with your health...get rid of that dangerous fat!

BE ALLURING! ACT NOW!
Reduce those hips, thighs, waist and other over-fat parts of your body this new, safe way NOW! Send coupon today for $1 bottle of 90 THINTABS to—THINTAB Company 853 7th Ave., New York.

Hiss-S-S-S!
(Continued from page 29)

SILVER SCREEN

Chester Morris, Joan Fontaine and Richard Dix head the cast of "Northern Flight."

will find restaurants of all prices all over the town, from the stars' expensive haunts to the extras' nickel beany.

It is impossible to set down any certain figure and say "that is enough for a trip to Hollywood." Modes of living differ and, of course, the length of time you plan on staying here enters into the matter. But with apartment rentals ranging around $50, you can fairly well figure out just what your expenditures will be.

The All-Year Round club of Southern California and the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce will be glad to send you booklets containing information about bus tours, historical spots, mountain resorts, beach resorts and all the other interesting things connected with a trip to this sunny southland. Don't hesitate to write for information on anything. This article is strictly limited to Hollywood information and contains the answers to all the questions that have been put to me by friends and acquaintances in the middle western states, since I first arrived here. Hollywood, fascinating though it is, must not completely overshadow all the many other attractions in Southern California and vicinity. Visit colorful Olvera street, the Mexican quarter of Los Angeles; and don't forget to see "---". There I go, after announcing this a strictly Hollywood article! Send for booklets. Map out your itinerary. And don't miss one place you want to see.

Settle down for your Hollywood stay. Get into a pair of slacks (they will give you that Hollywood feeling!). Stop in at a drive-in sandwich stand, sink your teeth into a big, juicy hamburger. (Ginger Rogers will probably be sitting right next to you doing the same thing.) And listen to the sandwich standardio blast out—"California, Here I Come!"

For that matter, any roque, rascal or villain (if you choose to look in the movies or on the stage) will find parts which he or she can play. The normality of such parts insures the success of the actor playing the role. Recall if you can any actor who ever has been typecast to the part of a rascal. These are the actor-proof roles, and many a bad actor has become famous because his studio so typed him.

Take, for instance, the "Dead End" kids, and contrast them to Bobbie Breen, if you wish a pertinent illustration of my contention that villainy is mostly palatable screen fare than sweetness and light. The "Dead End" group of juvenile delinquents abuse their parents, heckle the cops, he, steal and cheat and as a result get steady employment in the movies. Yet they are vastly more entertaining and believable in their misbehavior than the saccharine Master Breen is in his sugar-coated characterizations.

If I have failed to win you over to my side, take "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs." Even Disney had to compromise and introduce a wicked Queen, an old hag who went about the countryside plac-ing Miceys Finns in apples.

There is one angle to this Rogers Gallery article that should be touched upon, in a world which has become propaganda-conscious. Italy, Germany, Spain and the south American countries refuse to permit an American picture to play their theatres, if the villain of the piece is identified by name or speech or mannerisms as one of their nationalists. As a result, all screen villains must be Americans or English. Over the course of years, this has had its effect. Throughout the world, the impression has been broad cast that Americans and Englishmen have a monopoly on villainy.

This dates back as far as the first Chaplin comedies, when Mack Swain played the rogue parts. Swain, a big fellow, was Gollith to Chaplin's David and in the end, using his cane as a slingshot, Charlie always brought the pants and Swain to grief.

Even in their treatment of villains, the movies always insist that in the last reel, the malefactor must be killed or placed behind bars. He can murder or maim, stage or poison his victims for seven reels, but it is written in the book that in Red 8 (if it is an 8-reeler), he must be disposed of by the forces of law and order. The Will Hays office would not have it otherwise, and it is only on this condition that Mr. Hays and his associates unleash the culls of Rogers' Gallery.

With the league of horror.

Somewhere, in a middle lane between heroism and rascality, has Wallace Beery charted his course. Beery's villains are always mellow, well-liked fellows, and he has prospered accordingly. Tamiroff, in "Buccaneer," was given that kind of a half-and-half role and ran away with the picture, proving that the parts which Beery plays are actor-proof.